THE LAND CRIES OUT

Theology of the Land in the Palestinian-Israeli Conflict

We are excited to announce the release of The Land Cries Out, Theology of the Land in the Palestinian-Israeli Conflict, a collection of essays, poems, articles, interviews, and other writings from the Munayer family and other Holy Land residents. The book is a call to action, to understand the complexity of the conflict and to strive for peace.

The Land Cries Out is the second edition of the book. The first edition was released in 2011 and received widespread acclaim for its powerful storytelling and thought-provoking insights. The second edition includes new contributions from additional authors and retains the original essays, poems, articles, interviews, and other writings.

We hope you will join us in this important conversation and consider contributing your own thoughts and ideas to the ongoing dialogue about the conflict and its implications for the future of the region.

Musalaha Winter 2017

Obedience to the Light in Times of Darkness

By Dr. Salim J. Munayer, Director

During the holiday season, we often talk about light as a symbol of hope and safety during times of darkness. Many of us celebrate the light of Christmas, Hanukkah, and other holidays with candles, lights, and other symbols that represent our hope and faith. During this time, we are reminded of the importance of living in a land where the light of God’s love and grace shines brightly.

We are excited to announce the release of Obedience to the Light in Times of Darkness, a collection of essays, articles, and interviews from the Munayer family and other Holy Land residents. The book is a call to action, to understand the complexity of the conflict and to strive for peace.

We hope you will join us in this important conversation and consider contributing your own thoughts and ideas to the ongoing dialogue about the conflict and its implications for the future of the region.
Many times, men who have suffered and trauma of their bloody conflict. of children, and endured the fear victims of rape, suffered the loss of their loved ones, and witnessed the destruction of their homes. These experiences have created a sense of helplessness and despair in the population. It is this realization that has driven many to seek solutions to the issues they face.

Leymah Gbowee, a Liberian peace activist, is one of three African and peace activists who won the Nobel Peace Prize in 2011. Gbowee is a founder of the Women's Mass Action for Peace in Liberia, a women's movement in Liberia that began with a "crazy dream" of creating a new society. Gbowee's activism began with a "crazy dream" of creating a new society. Gbowee's "crazy dream" was to organize many women in a church and start a women's movement for peace. She believed that women had the potential to bring about change through non-violent means.

In September of this year, I had the opportunity to meet Musalaha alongside other youth activists. Musalaha is an inter-ministry Christian organization with various missions in the Middle East and North Africa. During this week, we heard about the importance of women from several different cultures. They are essential for building bridges between people from different societies, and their readiness to embrace those from other cultures is crucial.

The first night of our week-long project, Musalaha hosted a concert in France and Switzerland. The concert aimed to bring together people from different cultures and backgrounds to promote peace and understanding. Many people attended the concert, including youth activists from various countries. It was an opportunity for them to learn about each other's cultures and to appreciate the beauty of diversity.

The most remarkable moment of the concert was when a young woman from Lebanon took the stage to share her testimony. She spoke about her journey from a conflict-ridden country to a peaceful one, and the role of music in her life. Her words were powerful and moving, and it was clear that she was passionate about spreading peace and love. The audience was deeply touched by her story, and many were moved to tears.

It was truly a meaningful experience to witness the power of music and faith in promoting peace and reconciliation. The concert was a testament to the fact that music has the power to bring people together and to inspire positive change. It was a powerful reminder of the importance of working towards a world where differences are celebrated and where peace and understanding prevail.
